Judaism Despite Christianity: The Letters on Christianity ...

The "Letters on Judaism and Christianity" of Franz Rosenzweig and Eugen Rosenstock have rightly been described as one of the most important religious documents of our age. The two correspondents face each other not as official spokesmen of their respective faiths but as two human beings who are aware both of their separateness as Jew and Christian and their oneness in Adam.

I feel some considerable trepidation in commenting on this book, Judaism Despite Christianity, subtitled "The Letters on Christianity and Judaism between Eugen Rosenstock-Huessy and Franz Rosenzweig." The contents of the book are difficult and subtle, and rather than attempt a grand overview or summary, I propose to inch my way through it, commenting on passages that struck me -- from the introductory material to the letters, epilogue and closing essay, "Hitler and Israel, or On Prayer."
